Dr. David Lowther left his training in Urology to pursue a career in Radiation Oncology for the opportunity to focus more time on his passion for treating prostate cancer. He quickly developed a successful private practice in California where he was named Top Doctor in Silicon Valley in 2004-2006. His relocation to Atlanta in 2006, where he later founded the group Southeastern Radiotherapy Specialists, was in response to a growing number of patients from the metro-Atlanta area who were seeking the latest oncologic therapies available even though it meant traveling west to do so.

Dr. Lowther's unique training includes several years in Boston treating prostate cancer using the original software known now as IMRT, a technology used worldwide. His experience in Oakland, California at the country's first dedicated HDR brachytherapy center served as a springboard into his current dedication to prostate HDR, the most accurate and conformal modality currently available for treating this disease. In the relatively brief time he has been in Atlanta, no one has performed more prostate HDR than Dr. Lowther, a pace that has him at the top of his profession internationally. This extensive, hands-on experience not only makes Dr. Lowther unique among his peers but has solidified metro-Atlanta as an internationally sought-after destination for prostate treatment.

Dr. Lowther is a member of the American Society of Therapeutic Radiation Oncology, the American Brachytherapy Society, the American Society of Clinical Oncology, the American College of Radiology and the American Medical Association. His knowledge and rare expertise, in addition to his personal pledge to employ a cutting-edge, patient-focused practice make him a leader in his field.
